McDonald's more than two decades of human resources leadership experience has significantly impacted all Cross Country's lines of business, culminating in a world-class, high-performance workforce.

"Under Colin's direction, our human resources department has improved the company's ability to perform and excel by growing the company's workforce during the pandemic, bringing in bright new talent, establishing the standard for diversity and inclusion and energizing our corporate culture," said John Martins, Cross Country Healthcare president and CEO. "His daily contribution to our organization continuously drives our business strategy and the organization's competitive advantage positioning Cross Country as a destination of choice."

In addition to being part of Cross Country's executive leadership team, McDonald is a member of the Broward County NAACP and one of the country's historically Black fraternities, Kappa Alpha Psi.

Before joining Cross Country Healthcare, Colin held leadership positions at Carnival Cruise Lines, RandCol Staffing and Citrix. He received a bachelor's degree from the State University of New York and a master's degree from Mercy College.
